

Contents

Editors' Note	7
Constraints on the Use of the Present Perfect..... Markéta Janebová	9
It is for you and I. Variation in the Pronominal System in American English..... Ela Krejčová	25
The English Infinitive – Shod or Bare? (The Case of Help)	39
Jaroslav Macháček
Some Notes on Countability in English and Czech..... Michaela Martinková	49
The Semantic Field of Olfactory Perception in English and Czech..... Jaroslav Peprník	63
The Interaction between Word-Boundary Perception and Vowel Length in Native and Non-Native Speakers of Czech	89
Václav Jonáš Podlipský
English Prepositional Phrase (beside, before and in front of) and its Complementation by Personal or Reflexive Pronouns	101
Václav Řeřicha
Vague Reference to Notional Categories	115
Jarmila Tárnyiková
English Analytic Predicates and the Apparent Specificity of Have	133
Ludmila Veselovská

Editors' Note

Following Anglica I and Anglica II this serial volume is published under the heading of Anglica III, Linguistica, to explicitly reflect the conceptual change from the original coverage with separate Linguistics and Literature sections to a homogeneous linguistic series. The rationale rests primarily on pragmatic footing: with the everyday information explosion in every field of science, the traditional prototype of a philologist as a scholar with balanced knowledge of both language and literature (known from the classical Prague School period) has given way to a specialist prioritizing one of these domains in order to keep abreast of current trends and developments in the respective areas of his/her scholarly research. The editors believe that the new layout will cope with the present situation in a more reader-friendly way. Moreover, more space can be allocated to each of the contributions, with the consequent advantage of breadth and depth opened up for both theorizing and data-based discussions.

Though bearing witness to the common intention of the contributors to combine new insights with current information about the state of research, the papers in this volume are far from being monothematic: they reflect the diversity of research topics approached from various levels of language representation, and observed from single-language or cross-language perspectives.

The editors are grateful to the reviewers for their advice and assistance in the preparation of this volume. Thanks are also due to Matthew Sweney, who read the final draft and suggested many valuable amendments and language improvements.

Olomouc, March 2009

Jarmila Tárnyiková and Markéta Janebová